ANDREW MACK COMONG TO THE DAVIS.

Friday Evening, January 14.

Every stage presentation must of necessity have its particular appeal, but none of the current season's offerings seem to carry such a wide and general one to the high-brow and the low-brow, to the Irish and to the native, to the lover of comedy, and those who respond to the ever human emotions of melodrama, to the seeker after sweet, clean, sentiment, and those who admire the martial manners, and seeke braid of brilliant uniforms to gold braid of brilliant uniforms the student of history and liters or the musically inclined as does The Irish Dragoon in which Andrew Mack is now touring so successfully. The story of The Irish Dragoon is that of Charles O'Malley by Ireland's foremost writer, Charles Lever. It deals with life and love in picturesque Ireland, and Sunny Spain in the stirring times when Napoleon was carrying his campaign of conquest into the land of the Hidalgo. Theodore Burt Sayre, who has written many successful plays, is responsible for this version. Andrew Mack, who has forsaken the lure of vaudeville to return to the legitimate stage had it was especially written to suit his acknowledged talents, both as an actor of distinction, and a singer, second to none and, who will ever forget once having heard Andrew Mack sing one of those lilting, tuneful songs that he trills so sweetly. He has composed three new ones for the place Inter Markey and the place Inter Met. or the musically inclined as does The He has composed three new ones for the piece, Judy McCann, Close to This Heart of Mine, and For Ireland and You, which he sings in the role of the dashing, dare-devil soldier of the drawing room, as well as of the regi-

Mr. Mack will be seen in The Irish Draguon at the Davis theatre on Fri-day evening, January 14. Seats on day evening, January 14. Seats on sale Wednesday at 10 a.m. Prices 25c to $1.50. 500 good seats downstairs at $1.00. Mail orders should be sent

COLONIAL THEATRE.

Neal of the Navy, Two Reels, and Apaches of Paris, Kalem, Four Reels.

In the very thrilling events which are presented in rapid succession during the Neal of the Navy serial at the Colonial theatre it is apparent that to-day must offer some sensational event which shall have a telling effect upon the ultimate result of the story. And so there is. It shows Neal after he has gotten his charges to the mainland in safety, returning to the ship-wrecked vessel, the superstructure of which, with its wireless room only partly submerged, offers him an opportunity to send out a call for help. In the meantime Hernandez and his brute servant have landed on another part of the island and, gaining the confidence of the cannibals there, proceed to capture Annette and Mrs. Hardin and kill the remaining members of the crew. How Neal again proved a deciding factor at a moment when things looked blackest for Annette and Mrs. Hardin can best be told in this superbinoident of the picture today. Remember, there is only one more incident in In the very thrilling events which Boxed blackest for Annette and Mrs. Hardin can best be told in this superb incident of the picture today. Remember, there is only one more incident in this mammoth battleship serial, so don't miss any of them.

The other feature for today is the great Kalem Broadway favorite entitled The Apaches of Paris, a drama intensely thrilling, in which the heroine of the play witnesses a performance of the famous Apache dance as performed by Joseph Smith and Laura familion. These two people have toured both continents with this daring and novel dancing feature. It is a pronounced novelty, both as to action and environments, and is presented in this drama exactly as it is in the biggest feature houses of Broadway, New York. The story, a complicated one, will surely keep the audiences in a tense state of excitement during its presentation. Tomorrow, The Boarlet Sin, Bosworth's famous multiple reel feature.
